

Westport Brownfields Site

Baltimore, MD (ongoing)

Background:

In the Westport section of Baltimore, the former Carr-Lowery property located on the Middle Branch of the Patapsco River manufactured glass for 100 years. More recently, the plant has sat idle and served no productive use for the City of Baltimore. Now, a local developer is planning to build townhomes on this property in a manner that is protective of human health. The resulting $1.4 billion development will provide an increase in property tax revenue and encourage the revitalization of the area and restore an onsite wetland.

Currently, construction has not started, however the developer is targeting a zero release goal for stormwater runoff.
